

I am writing in regards to the FCC's "Localism" campaign concerning Low Power FM. I am against local services having priority over existing national and regional services on LPFM. I listen to K-Love radio on 106.7 FM. This is a national radio network headquartered in California providing contemporary christian music 24 hours a day. This type of programing was unavailable in our area for many years. While a national radio network, K-Love maintains regional managers for each of its listening communities. They provide free advertising for non-profit events through their community calendar. Our church has benefited from this service by having many of our events announced on K-Love. Every event announced by K-Love has brought people from neighboring cities that otherwise would not have known about it otherwise. As a listener, I am informed about conferences, concerts and other events throughout our region because of our K-Love station. If the K-Love LPFM signal were to be given to a local station, our entire region could be without the programing and services provided by this national radio network. Because it is a national radio network, I have been able listen to other K-Love LPFM stations while traveling in South Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, and Colorado. Again, I feel that local LPFM stations should not be given priority over existing regional and national services.

Sincerely,
Ernest Moore
